Look For A Light At The End Of The Tunnel

We seem to have hit a tipping point in the pandemic crisis. With continued mitigation efforts, it's possible to see a light at the end of the tunnel. More and more, talk has turned to what life will be like when it's all over, along with the feeling that we will overcome this.

Your Complete Guide to Safe and Comfortable

FEATURED APP REVIEW

Video Conferencing Apps: Zoom vs. Skype vs.

Face Covering

Q: I've started wearing a face mask every time I go out, per CDC recommendations; however, I'm finding these coverings to be less than comfortable. Is there any way around the irritations and discomforts of wearing face coverings?

A: Face coverings have become an essential wardrobe component for people all over the country (and world) as we continue to adapt to life during the coronavirus pandemic. Fortunately, complying with the CDC's advice doesn't need to translate into ongoing discomfort.

Here's how to comfortably wear your face coverings without compromising on safety.

Google Hangouts

It's where everything happens these days. Birthday parties. Corporate meetings. Coffee dates. Happy hour with friends. Visits with grandma. Anatomy and physiology 101. We're talking video conferencing apps, of course.

As Americans move indoors in an effort to comply with mandates for social distancing, lots of our everyday interactions have moved online, or more accurately, onto video conferencing. These apps have been around for a while, but now they've become an integral part of everyday life and a medium for sharing good times with friends — without the germs. Let's take a look at three of the most popular video conferencing apps on the market.
